AGM and members’ lunch

The annual general meeting of the Association took place on 6 February, and we are grateful to Rosario Padilla Montoya for kindly making available to us the Committee Room in the Consejería. Twenty people were present and there were three apologies.

The Secretary, Natalia Benjamin, presented her report, saying that the highlight of the year’s activities had undoubtedly been the inaugural lecture of the Association, given in London by Dr Tom Buchanan to a packed audience. Carmen Kilter and Manuel Moreno had represented the Association at an event in San Sebastián and valuable contacts had been made in the Basque country which lead to an offer to provide a grant for the reprinting of the book “Recuerdos”. A useful adjunct and visual aid for those giving talks has been banner telling the niñ os’ story that has been made.

The work done by the Association shows that it is continuing to propagate its aims and objectives.

The Membership Secretary, Gerald Hoare, reported that membership had increased and stood at 240. There had been a problem with over 50 outstanding subscriptions, not only for the current year but also for the previous one, and the decision to send all the offenders a letter informing them that their membership might lapse proved successful. Members should bear in mind that even if they are exempt from dues, they have to re register every year.

The Treasurer’s report said that the Association was on solid ground financially, there was a healthy balance which would enable the Association to undertake projects. The meeting closed with the re-election of the officers.

The AGM was followed, as usual, by the annual members’ lunch, which this year was held at the Sugo Restaurant in Notting Hill. It was a very pleasant to have the opportunity to talk informally to other members and to get to know them better. Remember that the AGM is open to any member, and the committee would appreciate it if more of our members attended.

Homenaje a Koke

por Lourdes Remón

El sábado 24 de abril nos dimos cita cerca de la tumba de Karl Marx en el cementerio de Highgate un grupo de amigos de Koke. Allí reposan sus cenizas. Para conmemorar la vida polifacética de Koke, su amigo Herminio Martínez diseñó una placa de bronce. La placa, que ostenta la bandera republicana, lle va las palabras: “Koque Martínez, Painter, Poet, Sculptor, Humanist, Idealist, Optimist, Spanish Republican” y termina con la frase: “Like Don Quixote, he strove to improve the world.”

Herminio abrió la ceremonia contando la vida y la obra de Koke. Se exhibieron algunos de sus cuadros que impregnan su visión de la humanidad. Después se descubrió la placa. Eddie Linden, poeta, recitó su poema: “I was three, you were eleven”. Se leyeron algunas poesías de Koke, escritas en inglés y en español, en las que se reflejan la naturaleza generosa y el trauma sufrido de este niño vasco por los acontecimientos históricos.

Finalmente, Helvecia Hidalgo corroboró las memorias de Herminio en los primeros días y años de exilio y éste reconoció el papel clave de ella como persona que mantiene al grupo unido.

Entre los invitados se encontraba Annette Clapton, cuyo padre, Charles Gildersleeve, adoptó a Koke a principios de los años 40.

Al terminar el homenaje, en un bar cercano, siguiendo los deseos de Koke, se ofreció un ágape. Fue un homenaje digno de merecer.

Anniversary lunch

by Cliff Kirkpatrick

The annual niñ os reunion and lunch was held on the 16 May at the Melia White House Hotel, the same venue as last year. It was organised by the co-ordinating committee, Luis Jarero, Amaya López and David Cabrera, who are the children of niñ os and who again did a splendid job.

Seventy six people in total attended and this number included 25 niñ os. It was good to see their delight at seeing old friends again, some of whom had travelled quite a distance. The food, conversation and general ambience all contributed to an unforgettable occasion. At the end of the meal some of the tables were moved away and Olga Osa started off with a lively flamenco dance. Others soon joined in and not long afterwards when the tempo had slowed down a bit, most of the people present were dancing. A great time was had by everyone.

La Retirada remembered

The annual commemoration of the Camino de la Retirada took place at Argelès-sur-Mer from 19-21 February 2010. Manuel Moreno was there and sends this report.

It is some years now since I joined a group of people called FFREEE* in Argelès-sur-Mer. We meet every February at this seaside town in southern France near the Spanish frontier. You look one way and beyond modern bungalows there is a beach 200 metres wide and many kilometres long; it is flat and a light cream and then beyond the expanse of the
The Association continues to make great strides in recruiting more members. There are no shortage of research topics concerning the Basque children in Great Britain, demonstrated by the fact that in the last six months five undergraduates have undertaken dissertations in the area. We must continue to encourage this valuable research.

I have found it most exciting to discover four “new” colonies which are not documented in any of the lists found in the standard books about the niños. I found them quite by chance, in Minutes of the BCC for example, or in newspaper reports. But these had to be verified, preferably by the niños themselves, which I was able to do in all four cases. And conversely, some colonies mentioned both in Minutes and in newspaper reports, never materialised, as is the case for Craigwell House, Bognor Regis and Milton Hall near Cambridge.

In January I was flattered to be asked by Agustina Cabrera if I would be her “room-mate” on a two week holiday in March in Santa Susana, a purpose-built resort north of Barcelona. I was able to benefit from this holiday because of my newly-acquired Spanish passport. The Spanish government organisation IMSERSO offers heavily subsidised off-peak holidays to Spanish pensionistas living abroad, and so I went with a party of nine, six of whom were niños vascos. I very much enjoyed getting to know the people in my group better, and was touched to see how they all cared for each other and how they seemed to be part of one large family. I certainly hope to go again, and recommend it to anyone who now holds a Spanish passport.

Details of next year’s holidays will be sent to me early next year, so get in touch with me for more information then.

I am sure you will find the report by Olwen Zornosa on El Parque de la Memoria at Sartaguda as moving as I did. Such monuments provide a much-needed catharsis. I would like to encourage more of our members to contribute articles for the Newsletter.

The owners of Rowley Lodge have recently been in touch and say they would be happy to show round the house and gardens sometime in June any of the niños who were in the Barnet colony, and give them tea! This seems like an opportunity not to be missed. If you were at that colony and would like to revisit it, please get in touch with me and I will coordinate the reunion.

We are now only two years away from the 75th anniversary of the niños’ arrival in Great Britain which will certainly be a very special occasion. While we cannot expect to emulate the events of the 70th anniversary in 2007, we already have some ideas as to how we can make this anniversary meaningful. Our first meeting is in June; everything needs to be planned carefully many months ahead. If you have any ideas, please get in touch with me. Let us strive to make the event even more memorable than Southampton 2007.

Agur,

Natalia Benjamin

Len Crome Memorial Lecture
by Colin Carritt

This year’s Len Crome lecture was given by Richard Baxell. Richard is a historian based in London, writing and lecturing on British involvement in the Spanish Civil War. His reputation as a committed Spanish Republican precedes him so we knew, even before the lecture, that we would be treated to a stirring and properly partisan lecture. We were not disappointed.

Richard illustrated his talk with contemporary film footage of the Jarama campaign and audio interviews with brigaders at the time and after the end of the war.

This approach had the advantage of providing first hand personal accounts of life in the trenches and during the always insufficient training at Madrigueras. Many of the volunteers were shocked at the poverty and squalor of village life when they first arrived but they were soon won over by the warmth of support they received there.

Nevertheless, they were not above complaining bitterly about the appalling food and the lack of drinkable water. Working class British beer drinkers soon got used to the cheap local wine as the only alternative. The volunteers had just five weeks of training with inadequate weapons and a paucity of ammunition, which meant that some infantrymen had fired just five rounds before they were sent to the front to save the main Madrid-Valencian road from being cut by the fascists. When they set off on 8 February the send-off from the locals was emotional. Most brigaders had never experienced life under fire and many were unashamedly terrified of those first days of warfare at Jarama.

The weather was appalling, sanitation was almost non-existent, they soon became infested with lice, the food was inferior and the opportunity for rest and recuperation for those on the front line simply didn’t exist. As a result, fatigue, confusion, ill-temper, accidents and demoralisation quickly set in. They were facing the might of a professional army of Moroccan and Spanish regular soldiers armed with sophisticated weaponry and heavy artillery.

The brigaders set up their ancient Russian machine guns only to find they had the wrong ammunition. Small wonder that within the first seven hours of fighting, of the 400 who started, just 125 remained alive. Finally, they got the correct ammunition for their Maxim guns and under the inspired leadership of Tom Wintringham they began a spirited rally. But it was not until 22 February, some two weeks after the start of hostilities, that both sides settled to a long stalemate that lasted to the very end of the war.

Richard Baxell’s lecture pulled no punches about the lack of preparedness of the Republican defence of Jarama. But it was also clear that the battle witnessed a heroic stand against a ruthless and well-armed enemy by a small battalion of committed internationalists determined to stem the advance of fascism not just in Spain but also across Europe and the world.

A reassessment of 20th century Spain
by Alicia Pozo-Gutiérrez

On 7 and 8 May a symposium was held at St Anthony’s College, Oxford, to pay homage to Sir Raymond Carr for his seminal work in the field and to celebrate his 91st birthday. It gathered some of the most eminent Hispanists, experts in Spanish history and contemporary political and economic issues, including José Álvarez Junco, Sebastián Balfour, Anne Deighton, Juan Pablo Fusi, Antony Beevor, Frances Lannon, Tom Buchanan and Santos Juliá.

The event provided an excellent opportunity to reassess the role of Spain in the light of the rapid transformations that the country has experienced since the last quarter of the 20th century following the death of Franco and the transition to democracy. Amongst the themes that lead to some of the most engaging discussions were undoubtedly the legacy of Francoism in post-transitional Spain; contested interpretations of the Second Republic and the Civil War in the context of the so-called movement for recuperation of historical memory; the current state of the Estado de las Autonomías; the changing position of Spain in the international arena and the challenges the country faces in the 21st century.

The Spanish exile
Natalia Benjamin presented a paper on 11 November entitled “Setenta Años Despuces: los niños vascos recuerdan su exilio en Gran Bretaña”. The conference was held at Exeter University and was on “The Cultural and Literary Meaning of the Spanish Political Exile of 1939” and was sponsored by the Fundación Largo Caballero, the Universidad Complutense of Madrid and the Department of Hispanic Studies at Exeter University.

Talks given

Story of a maestra
My mother Ana María González Gárata was a 22 year old teacher when she came to England on the Habana with the niños vascos in May 1937.

She never said much about her early life, but after her death in 2006, aged 91, using her documents and letters, together with memories of conversations, I have been trying to recreate this part of her life.

Ana María was born during the reign of Alfonso XIII in October 1914 in San Sebastián, the oldest of three daughters. When she was 10 years old, her father died tragically following an accident. Our grandmother was a strong, independent woman, and rather than return to the family village of Elgoibar in Guipúzcoa, she decided to work to maintain and educate her girls, and to stay in San Sebastián – not an easy task.

In September 1929, my mother applied and was accepted at the Escuela Normal de Maestros de Guipúzcoa in San Sebastián. She started her four year training, aged 15, during the dictatorship of Primo de Rivera, and qualified as Maestra de Primera Enseñanza Nacional in July 1933, during the Second Republic.

The Republic was formed in 1931 during the second year of her studies, and had a profound effect at the Escuela Normal. The Head and many of the teaching staff were replaced over the next few years by new staff who had studied abroad in Europe and the USA and who brought back with them new ideas and teaching methods. Schools became mixed, subject content and style were altered radically, with the emphasis on understanding, rather than rote learning, on exploring the natural world and experimentation, and on promoting healthy living and exercise. This was the changing and exciting environment in which my mother completed her studies.

With her teaching certificate she could only hold an untenured position: to become a tenured state teacher, it was necessary to present for oposiciones. Ana María started the process of getting the required good conduct certificates from the mayor and from the Criminal Registry, but whatever the case, whether there were no convictions, or whether she did not present herself for other reasons, she was unsuccessful and did not gain tenure.

When in her eighties and with her speech badly affected by a severe stroke, my mother did tell me that one of her first teaching jobs was in the Alto de Guernica, one of the few buildings to escape bombing in April 1937. She may have taught there, but I don’t know for sure.

Following the fall of San Sebastián on 13 September 1936 my mother, her mother and two sisters fled, carrying very little with them. They went first to Elgoibar, the maternal family home, and from there, with their maternal grandmother, the five women fled to Portugalete in Bilbao. I know, alas, that my mother didn’t have her teaching certificate with her. I don’t know where or when she left it, or how she retrieved it, but I do have it now in my possession.

The Republic needed teachers for the many schools it had created and for the milicias culturales formed to counter illiteracy. Amongst many decrees being issued was one saying that those who had finished bachillerato or who had started a teaching course could do a special Cursillo de 1936 to allow them to teach. As my mother wanted to teach, but did not have her certificate, she made legal declarations of her qualifications and named teachers who could testify on her behalf, but none of this helped, so she did the Cursillo de 1936 and qualified as a teacher, again!

In February, Ana María approached an old colleague from San Sebastián now in Bilbao, Jose María Gonzalez, president of the FUE de Euskadi (Federación Universitaria Euskal) a student socialist/communist movement. He wrote a letter of reference declaring her a founder member, who had frequently carried out tasks of responsibility and had always shown complete loyalty to the regime. It appears that this letter was in anticipation of a new decree which came out on 16 February saying that Cursillistas de 1936 who also had proof of loyalty to the regime could teach as untenured teachers. On 31 March she was offered a post at the Escuela de Primera Enseñanza at Galdacano, Vizcaya, with an annual salary of 4,000 pesetas. On 1 April 1937, in Galdacano, she signed her acceptance.

I don’t know if after all these difficulties she finally managed to practise her beloved profession for long, if at all: the front, that had been stopped near Eibar for six months, started to advance towards Bilbao. 31 March saw the bombing of Durango and 26 April that of Guernica, and teaching was suspended in Vizcaya. It appears that Ana María had been working (probably voluntarily) for some months in the Casa de Huérfanos de Milicianos, and she continued her work there in the now besieged Bilbao.

The situation in Bilbao was deteriorating daily with severe shortages of food. There were daily bombing raids and my mother spoke of hiding under the desks with children – presumably in the Casa de Huérfanos.

By now the evacuation of republican children had started. The British government finally agreed to allow a single boatload of children to enter Britain. The newspapers in Bilbao published requests for teachers to accompany the evacuees. People knew of the barbaric treatment being meted out to teachers: executions, beatings, incarceration – at the very least removal from their posts – so Ana María’s decision to travel to England would have been a bittersweet relief to her mother.

By 15 May she had received a letter from the Basque Government appointing her teacher no. 73 for the “expedition” to England. Three days later the Basque Government issued her with a passport and on 21 May, aged 22, she set sail in the Habana in charge of 4,000 frightened, seasick and homesick children.

She was a maestra at Stoneham for four months and then at The Oaks, Carolshalt until 1939. After that she was only allowed to work as a domestic, which she did. When my brothers and I had all started school, in the fifties, she applied to retrain here as a teacher, but she was told that she was not suitable as she had a foreign accent!

From my early memories of her and from watching her with my children, it is clear to me that teaching was part of her very essence. I wish I could tell her how much I admire the young Ana María I never knew.

Oxfordshire niños

On 14 January Natalia Benjamin gave a talk in Faringdon on the Basque children in Oxfordshire to the U3A. It had snowed heavily the night before and roads were treacherous, but in spite of this, seventy-five members turned up!

Two from Herminio

On 28 November, 2009, Herminio Martínez gave a talk in Irún on his experiences coming to Britain for the Asociación Republicana Iruneasca and the Idi Ezkerra Foundation. On 28 January he gave a talk in London at the Instituto Cañada Blanch (the Spanish School) in the series La Escuela de la Segunda República.

Exhibitions

Sutton Library

From 3-30 November 2009, the London Borough of Sutton Central Library put on an exhibition as a follow up to work being done about the refugee experience with schools in the area. The exhibition, for which the Association loaned nine panels, focussed on the Carshalton colonies.

Winchester

The “Los Niños” travelling exhibition from Southampton University will be on show in Winchester at the Hampshire Record Office, Sussex Street, from 10 May until 24 July. It will also be on show at Eastleigh Museum, High Street, from 20 November until 24 December in the gallery, Alicia Pozo-Gutierrez and Padmini Broomfield will give talks about it on 24 June from 2-3pm at the cinema, Winchester, and on 25 November at Eastleigh Museum.

“Antifascistas”

The IBMT inaugurated its travelling exhibition “Antifascistas” about the British and Irish volunteers in the Spanish Civil War on 5 May at the 12 Star Gallery, 8 Storey’s Gate, London SW1. It will be there until 14 May. It will subsequently go to Newcastle Central Library from 22 May to 7 June, then to Nottingham from 19 July to 3 August, to The People’s
Hiring charges

- Hire of the Association’s exhibition boards: £40
- Hire of exhibition material – laminated artefacts: £30
- Hire of exhibition material – laminated photographs: £30
- Hire of exhibition boards: £50
- Cost of reproducing photographs: £20 per photograph

Please note: if materials for exhibition purposes are required for more than two weeks, the cost will be greater.

In brief

The plaque at Montrose

The Secretary, Natalia Benjamin, was notified from different sources that the plaque that had been unveiled by Tom Borland at Mall Park House in Montrose was simply not there. It had vanished! After several months, it was finally found by the rubbish bins of the flats in Mall Park House and has now been firmly fixed to the wall by a friend of Tom’s.

Wanted

- We have a nearly complete set of “Amistad” – the paper produced by the Basque Boys’ Training Committee, but two numbers are missing: No. 3 September/October 1940 and No. 13 September 1941, as well as several covers. If anyone has these or knows where to find them, please contact the Secretary Natalia Benjamin on 01865 459744.
- Can anyone remember anything about Consuelito Carmona? She helped the niños learn the dances for their shows, especially in the north, and appeared herself in many of them. Again, if you have information, contact the Secretary.

Research

Five students, undergraduates from Bristol University, Newcastle University, the LSE and Sheffield University are currently working on aspects of the Spanish Civil War and the niños for their final year dissertation. They have been helped by the Secretary in finding materials and have consulted the archives.

Erratum

Nobody noticed, but in Newsletter No. 12, the picture we claimed to be Shornells (page 8) was in fact Hutton Hall! Below is a photograph of Shornells.

Adiós

by Ramonchu, Amistad No 19, May/June 1942

Despedíanse los vascos para irse en el Habana

hacia Inglaterra con rumbo niños y niñas marchaban.

Despedíanse de sus padres que muy tristes se quedaban los suspiros les salían y los ojos le lloraban.

Adiós decían los padres.

Adiós también al Habana.

Adiós dicen los amigos

Para los niños que marchan.

Pasan los años

by Luisito, Amistad No 19, May/June 1942

Pasan los años

Cual ojas de un libro, tristes por la guerra que ellos han traído.

No son de verano,

ni de primavera,

ni de inviernos fríos,

que son todo uno de sangre y de fuego,

cadáveres yertos

y de cementerios.

Esto trajo Franco

con brutal intento:

un segundo Hitler!

Pronto caerá muerto.

Pues los niños crecen

Para vengar esto.

Pasan los años

De sangre y de fuego.

Recuerdo

by Antonio Amistad No 9 April 1941

Cuando yo era pequeño tuve amor de hogar, pero no por mucho tiempo pues lo tuve que dejar.

Por librarme de amarguras de lloros y descontentos, tuve yo que refugiarme en este país extranjero.

Dejé yo mi amado hogar, dejé el amor maternal; por librarme triste vida perdi la felicidad.

Un día, yo bien recordo la despedida final: padre, madre y los hermanos todos querían llorar pero por darme alegría tuvieron que disimular el llanto que les salía.

Por darme, pues, alegría, sacrificáronse ellos; por darme, pues, alegría, la felicidad ha muerto.

Did you know?

Footballers

Two niños vascos Raimundo Pérez Lezana and Emilio Aldecoa Gómez each played football professionally in Britain for local clubs and league clubs (Coventry and Wolverhampton). They each played, at different times, for Athletic Bilbao and each represented Spain once in their careers. Lezama was a legendary Spanish goalkeeper and is considered a “revolutionary” player in that he introduced to Spanish football new techniques that he had picked up while he lived and played in England, techniques that included throwing the ball into play and moving out of your area to meet an aerial ball. Emilio Aldecoa went on to become coach and manager to Gerona and Real Valladolid.

Forthcoming events

IBMT commemoration

The annual IBMT ceremony at Jubilee Gardens will be held this year on 3 July. It honours the British and Irish International Brigaders and starts at 1pm. Tube: Waterloo.

Lecture

The second annual lecture of the Association will be given by Professor Paul Preston on Saturday.

How to support the Association
Niños and their spouses/partners and widow/ers are honorary members. Annual subscriptions (which are renewable in May) for other family members and supporters of the Association’s aims are:
- £10 for individuals
- £25 for institutions.
Contact Membership Secretary Gerald Hoare for membership application forms. These may also be found on the website.

Our aims
1. To reunite the niños of the Spanish Civil War who were exiled in Great Britain in 1937 and who did not return to Spain or who returned later, that is, those who had the common experience of being evacuated.
2. To preserve for descendants and future generations, through the collection of oral and written testimonies, the memory of the niños’ experience of the period and their subsequent life in Britain.
3. To place the experience of the exile within its rightful historical context, so the niños should not be “los olvidados”.
4. To provide a forum for discussion and to promote dialogue between niños, researchers and interested persons.
5. To encourage the collection and preservation of archives (photographs, letters, documents, films, songs, posters, oral testimonies, artwork etc) to be used for educational and historical purposes, eventually to be deposited in the Special Collections Division of the Hartley Library at the University of Southampton.
6. To locate commemorative plaques and to ensure their preservation and maintenance; to organise the setting-up of other dedicated plaques to commemorate the experience.
7. To liaise and collaborate with related societies of niños vascos in other countries.
8. To facilitate and support research into the history of the evacuation of the niños vascos who were sent to Britain.
9. To inform members about new developments in the knowledge of the period through publications, bibliographies, web pages etc.
10. To advance the education of the public, students and academics in the subject of the exile of 1937.

Newsletter
The BC’37AUK Newsletter is published twice a year and is sent free to all members. Back numbers can be downloaded from the BC’37AUK website: www.basquechildren.org. The deadline for the next issue is 28 October 2009.
Editor: Natalia Benjamin (see details above for BC’37AUK Secretary).

“One Show”
On 15 July, the BBC, “One Show” will present a very short film on the niños’ experience.
The forgotten colonies

by Natalia Benjamin

There were over one hundred colonies lived in by the Basque children. The "official" lists and names of the colonies and their location in Gregorio Arrien's book, "Niños Vascos en Gran Bretaña", and in Dorothy Legarretta's "The Guernica Generation" are woefully incomplete and, in some cases, wrong. Difficulties arise when the colony is called after either the name of the house, if it has one, or the name of a town, which may not be that near (as in the case of Elford Hall near Lichfield and Avoncroft Agricultural College in Evesham which are usually just called "Birmingham"). There is no consistency. So I have been trying to establish a more definitive list, and at the same time find a photograph of each colony with the proper house name and its address.

In the course of my investigations, I have "discovered" four colonies that are not mentioned in the published lists, although from minutes of the Basque Children's Committee meetings, from newspaper reports and from testimonies of surviving niños themselves, there is clear evidence that they did indeed exist and were lived in by niños.

From late June until 13 October, 170-172 West Hill, Putney, was home to 40 Basque children, prior to their relocation three and a half miles away to more permanent accommodation at The Grange, 121 Kingston Hill. This discovery was made as a result of copies of documents given to the Association by Luis Calvete, whose parents had come to Britain in 1917 and who were both very active in helping with the Basque children who had arrived in 1937. His father helped organise and even took part on the guitar, in several of the concerts put on by the niños. His diary recorded visits to the children in Putney before they moved to Kingston Hill. One of the niños who now lives in San Sebastián remembers that his sisters were in Putney before going to Kingston Hill.

Then an additional colony in Wales came to light when I read the proof of Hywell Davies' book on the niños in Wales. The colony at Brechfa had not been very successful and some boys had rioted; they were due to move to Margate in October. But they weather became cold and the boys could not continue to live in huts and so they spent the month of September 1937 in Bromwyyd, a sham castle built round an earlier house in the gothic revival style. It was not far from Brechfa, near the village of Newcastle Emlyn. José Armolea, one of the niños who was there, recalls that it was dark and gloomy, with crows flying around day and night.

Another "new" colony was at Ambleside in the Lake District. It was reported in the local paper, the "Westmorland Gazette" of 23 October 1937 that 25 children were being transferred to Fairfield Guest House in Ambleside from Brampton, accompanied by their teacher, Virginia Martínez del Castillo. The house had been acquired for the purpose by the Cumberland and Westmorland branch of the BCC. Niño Agustina Cabrera today recalls going to Ambleside to a house near a bridge that is a famous landmark. The house was part of Charlotte Mason Training College and the Basque children were in an annexe. Later it became part of the campus of the Universities of Lancaster and Cumbria. The final "new" colony for me was a house in the village of Newton Green, near Sudbury, Suffolk. A local doctor, Grace Griffiths had offered it to the NCSR. When the children had to vacate Bray Court, they were allotted to other colonies, and there was a list of these attached to one of the minutes of the BCC. The names of all the colonies the children were relocating to were familiar to me, except for one, which said "c/o Dr Grace Griffiths, Newton Green, Sudbury, Suffolk". I was intrigued, so I rang up a local historian who was able to verify that there had indeed been children staying at Dr Griffiths' house, Brooke House. I subsequently verified this information not only by reading about it in the Minutes of the Basque Children's Committee Sub Committee but also by talking to José Osa and Iñigo Segurola who had been there. I also corresponded with Dr Griffiths' daughter who sent me a photograph of the boys who had stayed there.

There were about 10 boys in Dr Griffiths' colony and they were employed at a nearby farm, Rogers Farm, first painting beehives and then picking mushrooms. They stayed for just over a year. Marcelo Segurola had come over on the Habana and had been at Bray Court. He was sent to Newton Green. His parents came over to England to fetch him at the end of July 1939 to take him with the family to Argentina. But they were trapped in Britain as all civilian shipping had been stopped. As Dr Griffiths was very busy, the Segurolas acted as house parents to the children that were there. Dr Griffiths had come originally to the area to be a locum for two weeks at the local TB hospital in Nayland, and ended up staying for 50 years! She went twice to Spain during the war to help in the hospitals there. She is described as being far from pretty, with "bottle specs and protruding teeth", but as one of the most beautiful people the writer had ever known, exuding love and care, so it would have been typical of her to want to help the Basques. She and her family lived in a small cottage at Arger Fen, Assington, while their larger house, Brooke House, in Newton Green was used by niños.

I would be pleased to hear from anyone who was at the above-mentioned colonies.
What happened to the Habana?

by Natalia Benjamin

The Habana remained at Southampton until 29 May when she left for the return passage to Bilbao, once again escorted by the destroyer Fearless. It was proposed that the Habana might take back with her on the voyage much-needed medical supplies but this was not permitted by the British government who felt it might be perceived as a breach of the non-intervention agreement. This trip by the Habana to England was, in fact, to be a one-off event. Shortly afterwards, when the fall of Santander appeared imminent, fresh approaches were made to the British government for permission for Spanish refugees to be allowed entry into Britain but the proposal was unequivocally rejected. So that is the end of the association of the Habana with the Basque children. But what happened to the ship after that? She had an eventful life. She was moored at Bordeaux until the end of the war as a hospital ship and returned to Bilbao in 1939. There was a fire on board that destroyed much of the accommodation, and the Habana was remodelled to take both passengers and cargo. In 1942, she sailed to Latin America with 12 passengers and 458 cubic metres of cargo. At the end of the war, she was refitted as a passenger ship, burning only fuel, and spent many years going from Spain to America until she moored in Vigo in 1960.

Then Pescanova bought it. It was a company founded that same year by José Fernández López, who set out to solve the age-old problem in the Spanish fishing industry, namely how to preserve fish caught away from Spain’s ports – in the South Atlantic for example – so that the fish did not spoil during transport times of as much as three weeks. Fernandez recognised that the development of refrigeration and freezing technologies offered a new possibility for transporting fish. In 1960 he began outfitting his first freezer vessel, the Lemos. It was successful off the coast of Argentina, and then went to South Africa, returning with more than 250 tons of hake. Encouraged by this success, the company then acquired its second vessel, “a retired cruise ship called the Habana”. Pescanova converted it into a giant floating factory, renaming it the Galicia. In its new capacity, the boat set sail for South Africa in 1964, supported by its own fleet of fishing boats. While the Galicia served as a production vessel, including freezing but also breading and frying facilities, transport back to Spain was provided by a fleet of dedicated freezer vessels.

In 1975, she laid anchor at Vigo and what we learn about the fate of the Habana/ Galicia is that in 1978 she was sold for scrap and broken up at Vigo. Later, the anchor of the Habana was donated in 1990 to the Philippe Cousteau Anchor Museum by the Ayuntamiento of San Sebastián: it is considered to be one of the treasures of the museum. The open air museum is situated on La Peñon peninsula in Salinas, a town within the Castillón municipality in Asturias. As a footnote, in 1980, Ricardo Fernández, the former master of the Habana, saw an announcement in the press that the Basque children from England were planning a reunion in Bilbao, and so he wrote to the mayor asking whether he could go to the reunion and meet some of those niños whom he had ferried those many years ago. His letter was passed on to Helvecia Hidalgo, the organiser. She replied to him, saying that unfortunately the meeting had to be postponed, but she hoped he would be able to come the following year and that the niños had been very touched to see that after such a long time he still remembered them. Ricardo Fernández replied that as he was 76 years old, he wasn’t sure of being there and her letter had moved him to tears.

What an interesting history the ship has, although its role in evacuating the Basque children is for me the highlight of its eventful operational service.

El Parque de la Memoria, Sartaguda

by Olwen Zornosa

Navarra now has a memorial to the province’s victims of Nationalist troops during the years of the Civil War and after. El Parque de la Memoria, standing just outside Sartaguda, a village some 40km south of Estella, was officially opened in May 2008 and Venancio (a niño) and I were taken there by family when we were visiting his home town of Alsasua in June that year. Sartaguda has long been known as “el pueblo de las viudas”, because of the high proportion of its men taken away and not seen again, so it was an appropriate place to choose, if in no way unique.

The site is high and open, the day we visited a bit stark under the burning sun, but trees have been planted and in time it will become more like a garden. It is dominated by a gigantic metal sculpture, 8m high, of three standing figures, heads bent together, linked by their arms on one another’s shoulders. There is another two dimensional sculpture, a sheet of rusted metal with the cut-out figure of a bound man, riddled with bullet holes. And there are standing tablets on which poems have been inscribed, in both Castilian and Basque.

The site was chosen by the sculptor, Joxe Ulibarrena, with the original intention of erecting a single sculpture but the project was expanded by the wishes of local people and the necessary funds were contributed by provincial government, by many local municipalities and by national government.

Central to all is a wall with the name of every man, 3,420 in all, whose death researchers have been able to verify by searching records, often hidden or obscured, and disintering and identifying bones from unmarked graves, work which has taken many years and which still continues. Listed alphabetically, town by town and village by village and, again alphabetically, name by name, it did not take long for Venancio to find his father’s name among the 86 listed for Alsasua.

I am sure his gratitude for this belated recognition was shared by all the relatives of the identified victims, who have waited so many years for some kind of memorial to their dead.

The memorial park features the names of 3,420 civilians murdered by the Francoists.
